Dining With Al Qaeda is a surprisingly delightful and slightly dreadful read about the various peoples of the Middle East. Being born in England and having spent decades living in the Middle East as a reporter for various outlets, including the Wall Street Journal, the author brings a unique perspective that offers insight and wise perspective (from decades of first hand experience) into the

Thanks for sharing Hugh Pope's Dining with Al Qaeda. I appreciate the passage recognizing that Pope owns up to his prejudices, and still able to present an objective viewpoint. I also appreciate the comparison to Friedman's book (which I have read). I look forward to finding a copy of Dining with Al Qaeda. Thanks! -r
